

Hypoxia is a challenge that many marine organisms including crustaceans need to acclimate to in periods of low oxygen. They accomplish this through the HIF metabolic pathway. This pathway includes genetic expression of various genes to adapt to levels of low oxygen.

