

The HIF pathway is not needed for some organisms to watch their oxygen levels. In fact it may be more beneficial for some species to not depend on a HIF system since they are more likely to survive in an oxygen deficient environment. If the oceans are overwhelmed with hypoxia then species with an exoskeleton may evolve to have different genes, similar to the gene sequence found in Tigriopus californicus.